Weather of Concern

Northern California:

- The central and northern Sacramento valley have been upgraded to an excessive heat warning, and an advisory has been issued for the southern Sacramento valley and surrounding foothills. The Delta region will be spared from the heat headlines thanks to the cooling delta breeze.
- Fire Weather Watch in effect Thursday afternoon through evening for Del Norte County.

Southern California:

- Dangerous heat is expected through Thursday across southwestern California.
- A strong high pressure system will warm daily high temperatures to 85-92 degrees along the immediate coast, 92-100 degrees for inland portions of the coast, and to 100-110 degrees in the valleys, foothills and deserts.
- Overnight low temperatures will offer little reprieve from the heat, ranging from the mid 60s to mid 70s, except 80s in the foothills.
- Red Flag Warning in effect for Santa Barbara County through 07/26/18 at 1000 hours.

Key Points

07/26 – 08/01

Thursday-Friday

- Very high heat risk, especially in southern California and Interior Valleys
- Isolated thunderstorms in the Sierra-Nevada mountain range both Thursday and Friday
- Strong sundowner winds will create critical fire weather conditions in the Santa Barbara County mountains and South Coast through Thursday

Saturday-Wednesday

- Some cooling is expected, but temperatures will remain warm, especially in the interior
- Additional moisture could bring isolated thunderstorms with a threat of flash flooding to far southern CA Sunday through Wednesday
- Continued warm and dry conditions could lead to pockets of elevated fire weather concerns

Cooling, but Still Warm; Similar Sunday and Into Next Week

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

 VERY hot, dry conditions will continue, some moderation in temperatures expected early next week. *****

The airmass over Northern California will be less moist today and Thursday, but some afternoon cumulus buildups are still expected over the mountains, and a few of those might reach thunderstorm status over the northern mountains in particular. Outflow winds from any of these thunderstorms could gust to as much as around 40 mph.

Strong high pressure will persist over California into next week. The North Ops region will be quite hot and dry. Temperatures will become as much as around 10 degrees above normal for the next few days followed by only a few degrees of cooling expected this weekend. There is some chance that a low pressure trough moving through the Pacific NW early next week will bring somewhat cooler conditions to the region with highs dropping to just a few degrees above seasonal normals. Overall, winds will be quite light across the region as well. Coastal areas will be under the influence of a rather shallow marine layer with a fairly light onshore flow, but the marine layer may deepen a little early next week and reach a little further inland then.

Near record high temperatures today**

Today will likely be the peak of the heat wave as high pressure intensifies overhead. High temperatures will be close to records with afternoon readings of 105-109 in the inland valleys and foothills to 125 in the low desert. Minimum RH may drop into the 10-15% range in a few select locations with the lowest readings on the north side of the Angeles N.F., the Kern County Mountains and the interior valleys of Monterey and San Luis Obispo Counties. Isolated wet thunderstorms will continue be possible in the Sierras the next two days with one or two cells possible on the desert side of the San Bernardino and Cleveland N.F. A slow cooling trend will commence Thursday as onshore flow begins to become established. The coastal areas will likely cool 5-8 degrees Thursday and Friday, but it may be Saturday before the inland valleys drop below 100 degrees. This weekend into early next week, high pressure will drift a bit further northeast which may open the door for just a bit of monsoonal flow into Southern California. Isolated wet thunderstorms will be possible from the eastern side of the Angeles N.F. and the desert sides of the San Bernardino and Cleveland N.F. each afternoon beginning Sunday. Temperatures will be within a few degrees of normal early next week with highs generally in the 90s in the valleys to 108 in the desert. Little, if any, convection is expected in the Sierras after tomorrow as southwest flow prevails over the central part of the state.
